Georgetown University Environmental Conference, 4/11/2007

"In an environmental economy the great thing is that we can do both; we can protect the environment and protect the economy, and that's what I've been saying for years. Of course, people didn't believe in it. People said that you have to choose between one or the other; we have to choose between the environment and the economy. And I said no, we can do both. We can protect the economy and protect the environment, and we have proven that in California."

The Governor's market-based policies are enabling clean technology growth. Economic growth and environmental action are not mutually exclusive. Sound, market based public policy has spurred record private investment in California's clean tech sector, driving research, development and job growth.

"People always say you can't be pro-business and pro-environment, but they are dead wrong," said Gov. Schwarzenegger. "You can do both and we're proving it everyday in California. We are attacking global warming and still creating thousands of new jobs. We are leaders in energy efficiency and leaders in attracting new investment. I'm proud to report our economy is booming once again."
